

Did you know that you have the right to refuse to dissect animals on Prince Edward Island?

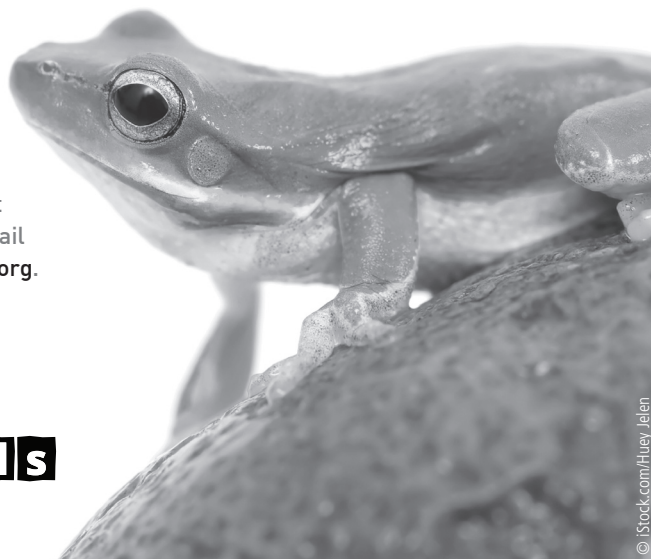

It's true! Each year, countless animals (including frogs, cats, and fetal pigs) are cruelly killed and then cut up in classrooms across the country—even though humane alternatives exist. Studies have shown that students who use alternatives to dissection perform just as well as—if not better than—students who cut up animals. You don't have to dissect animals! Explain to your teacher that you won't be dissecting and that the law [Education Handbook for School Administrators 2012-2013] gives you the right to say "No!" to cutting up animals on Prince Edward Island:

Should a student wish not to participate in a dissection activity for moral, religious, or other acceptable reasons, then a meaningful alternative to the dissection activity must be provided for the student. Students are to be informed, at the beginning of any course potentially involving the practice of animal dissection, of their right to choose to not dissect animals. [Education Handbook for School Administrators 2012-2013]

Dissection is unnecessary and cruel. Stand up for animals, and exercise your rights. Choose not to dissect.

For more information or to get involved, visit PETAKids.com or e-mail us at PETAKids@peta.org.

PETAkids

© iStock.com/Huey Jelen

Did you know that you have the right to refuse to dissect animals on Prince Edward Island?

It's true! Each year, countless animals (including frogs, cats, and fetal pigs) are cruelly killed and then cut up in classrooms across the country—even though humane alternatives exist. Studies have shown that students who use alternatives to dissection perform just as well as—if not better than—students who cut up animals. You don't have to dissect animals! Explain to your teacher that you won't be dissecting and that the law [Education Handbook for School Administrators 2012-2013] gives you the right to say "No!" to cutting up animals on Prince Edward Island:

Should a student wish not to participate in a dissection activity for moral, religious, or other acceptable reasons, then a meaningful alternative to the dissection activity must be provided for the student. Students are to be informed, at the beginning of any course potentially involving the practice of animal dissection, of their right to choose to not dissect animals. [Education Handbook for School Administrators 2012-2013]

Dissection is unnecessary and cruel. Stand up for animals, and exercise your rights. Choose not to dissect.

For more information or to get involved, visit PETAKids.com or e-mail us at PETAKids@peta.org.

PETAkids

© iStock.com/Huey Jelen